Institutional Authorization

The Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands does not regulate distance education. Therefore, approval for WGU to offer distance education programs to students located in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands is not required.

Licensure Pathway

Candidates applying for a teaching license in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands do so through the reciprocity licensure pathway. Licensing through reciprocity means that candidates must first acquire a Utah teaching license before applying for licensure in their state. Not all states require reciprocity for all programs. Complete details on licensure requirements in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands as well as information on applying using the reciprocity licensure pathway can be found in the licensure handbook.

Educational Prerequisites

WGU's education preparation programs satisfy the applicable educational prerequisites for professional licensure in Utah for the licenses listed below, which may lead to the award of the basic teaching license through reciprocity in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands. Once a candidate has obtained their Utah license, the candidate applies under the Northern Mariana Islands reciprocity licensure system.

Candidates who apply for licensure in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands using the reciprocity pathway will receive a basic teaching certificate. To move from the basic teaching certificate to the intermediate teaching certificate, candidates are required to take a course in history of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands as well as a cultural seminar.

While WGU's programs listed below satisfy the educational prerequisites, due to Covid 19, the licensure office in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands has posted a notice that it will not be processing any licenses while the office is closed due to the pandemic. The notice indicates that the duration of that closure may be through April 2021.
