

High-Quality Programs Creating Skilled Professionals

The Michael O. Leavitt School of Health at WGU aims to advance health equity by adding competent professionals to the workforce, yielding improved patient outcomes and addressing health and nursing shortages across the United States. With more than 20 competency-based, affordable programs in health and nursing, the school expands access to high-quality education, thereby creating an impact on the health landscape of the country, one student at a time.

Accreditation

The baccalaureate degree programs in nursing, master's degree programs in nursing, and postgraduate APRN certificate programs at WGU are accredited by the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education (<http://www.ccnaccreditation.org>).
